We are excited to welcome back recent Baruch graduates for a panel discussion about their first year as alumni. Transitioning from student to professional, gaining back hours lost studying and writing papers, acclimating to a new job, adapting to a new social life, and the curve balls they've experienced since graduating!

Panelists include:

Shantel Deleon graduated from Baruch College in 2017 with a major in Accounting and dual minors in Communications and Business Analytics. Shantel currently works at Fly Blade, Inc. which is an asset-light and digitally powered consumer aviation company. Shantel is also an Adjunct Lecturer. Shantel is affiliated with many organizations including America Needs You, Management Leadership for Tomorrow, and the National Association of Black Accountants. As a result of her involvement in these organizations Shantel is dedicated to assisting students like herself navigate the professional services industry and advance professionally and personally.

Jonathan Hla (Class of 2017) majored in Finance with an Economics minor at Baruch College's Zicklin School of Business, attending from August 2012 through December 2016. During his time at Baruch, Jon participated as Captain of the Men's Swimming & Diving Team and headed up Baruch IMG, a long-only student-managed equity fund of over $250,000. Jon currently works at JP Morgan as an Analyst in the Investment Banking Credit Risk group. While post-Bearcat life is indeed enjoyable, Jon admits there's nothing quite like finals nights in the library, surviving on dollar pizza, and the Thursday VC buzz.
